The State Bank of Pakistan Act, 1956, being an old law would benefit from being updated to bring it closer to the current emerging functions of a modern central bank and to better conform to best international practice.

2. The Monetary and Fiscal Policies Co-ordination Board is redundant in terms of current practice. It is proposed to replace it and give the current Monetary Policy Committee statutory status, with external experts to be appointed by the Federal Government. The Central Board will be represented by two members on the Committee which will be responsible to formulate, decide and implement the monetary policy and decide on matters such as those relating to key interest rates, supply of reserves, exchange rate policy, and the limits and nature of advances and loans to the Government. The main object for introducing this statutory committee is to facilitate the State Bank’s autonomy in performance of its essential functions in the changing financial environment. Consequently, various sections in the Act have also been amended in order to bring them in line with the role of the Monetary Policy Committee.

3. Lending to the Government has been restricted by insertion of a new section (Section No. 20A).

4. Emergent functions pertaining to open market and credit operations and international reserves have been elaborated and clarified by substitution of the existing sections.

5. Section 52 of the SBP Act which provided for the supersession of the Central Board by the Federal Government since the time the State Bank was privately owned, has been repealed in conformity with the current autonomy of the Central Bank, and international practice.

6. These amendments will make the law more conducive to the changing global economic and regulatory environment and will better enable the modern functions of the Central Bank.
